CHARACTER OF THE WORK.

"Mr. Woodward uniformly discovers a love of Virtue and Humanity, which entitles him to an higher Commendation than that which belongs to a merely good Writer. In the present Publication we observe much to admire and still more to divert us in the numerous and humorous Sketches with which the Author has embellished his Volume."

MONTHLY REVIEW for March 1798.

☞ This Work is singular in its kind, a perfect Unique.—The numerous Large Prints with which it is embellished are extremely expressive, entertaining and amusing, and have not the least Tendency to Malignity or the smallest Indelicacy; on which Account it is a great Favourite in Families where it is known, particularly with the Fair Sex.

☞ Contrasted Specimens of a POLITE PREACHER and an UNPO-LITE DECLAIMER, with the Sermons at length, may be had separate,
Price 2s. coloured, or 1s. 6d. plain.

TO THE PUBLIC.

WITH all deference to that sagacious observer of men and manners, the ingenious STERNE, who has given what he thought a complete and descriptive catalogue of Travellers, there is another which is as respectable as any he has mentioned, and that is, The CHARACTERISTIC TRAVELLER, whose observations are as serviceable and entertaining as those of the Sentimental or Inquisitive Traveller. In fact, he unites in himself the best properties of both; and that he does so may be proved by an authority few will be disposed to slight. Mr. Grose speaks thus of Caricature: "It should be considered that it is one of the " elements of satirical painting, which like poetry of the same
" denomination, may be most efficaciously employed in the cause
" of virtue and decorum, by holding up to public notice many " offenders against both, who are not amenable to any other tribunal! and who, though they contemptuously defy all serious
" reproof, tremble at the thoughts of seeing their vices or follies
" attacked by the keen shafts of ridicule."

The Public have been highly gratified by the Works of an able and elegant Author, descriptive of the picturesque beauties of landscape and cattle, illustrated by suitable designs:—then why should not the variegated forms of nature in the physiognomy of the human race in respect to countenance and character, afford subjects equally worthy the exertions of the pen and pencil?—It is, indeed, new to make this the prominent part of a Traveller's plan, but it is certainly as much entitled to that distinction as Antiquarianism, Butterfly-hunting, or delineating old Trees, clumsy Rocks, and Furze-Bushes.

In the present work such exhibitions are not to be expected, nor will the reader "be entertained with Bull-feasts, hubb'd Lions, or fricasseed Crocodiles, but in lieu of such sumptuous fare, endeavour to make himself content with a few home-made dishes of Observation, and a short trip across the Severn, by way of bonne-bouche."

MAN is the object in which we are the most interested, the variations, therefore, in the human character as exhibited in different provinces of the same kingdom, in manners, customs, figure, dress, employment, amusements, and opinions, must afford an ample and profitable field of observation.

G. M. WOODWARD.
